ORDER GRANTING PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

19 Plaintiffs California Trucking Association, Ravinder Singh, and Thomas Odom 20 move for a preliminary injunction. Having carefully considered the parties' arguments, the 21 motion is GRANTED.

22 I. BACKGROUND

23 The following facts are taken from the Second Amended Complaint and the 24 declarations filed related to Plaintiffs' preliminary injunction motion.<sup>1</sup> Plaintiff California 25

26
27 <sup>1</sup> Plaintiffs and Intervenor filed various declarations and numerous evidentiary 28 objections, Docs. 56, 74. Notably, "a preliminary injunction is customarily granted on the basis of procedures that are less formal and evidence that is less complete than in a trial on

1 Trucking Association (“CTA”) is an association of licensed motor-carrier companies that 2 manage, coordinate, and schedule the movement of property throughout California. Many 3 of CTA’s motor-carrier members contract with owner-operators as independent 4 contractors. Plaintiff Ravinder Singh is one example. He owns and operates his own truck, 5 and he contracts as an independent contractor with different motor carriers and brokers in 6 California to perform various trucking services. Plaintiff Thomas Odom also owns and 7 operates his own truck. He contracts as an independent contractor with a national motor 8 carrier to haul property within California and between California and Texas.

9 For decades, the trucking industry has used an owner-operator model to provide the 10 transportation of property in interstate commerce. That model generally involves a 11 licensed motor carrier contracting with an independent contractor driver to transport the 12 carrier-customer’s property. The volume of trucking services needed within different 13 industries can vary over time based on numerous factors. For example, in the agriculture 14 industry, demand for trucking services varies depending on the time of year, the price at 15 which the produce can be sold, the available markets, the length of the growing season, 16 and the size of the crop, which itself varies based on temperature, rainfall, and other factors.
17 Motor carriers offer many types of trucking services, including conventional trucking, the 18 transport of hazardous materials, refrigerated transportation, flatbed conveyance, 19 intermodal container transport, long-haul shipping, movement of oversized loads, and 20 more. Motor carriers meet the fluctuating demand for highly varied services by relying 21 upon independent-contractor drivers.

23
24
25 the merits.” Univ. of Texas v. Camenisch, 451 U.S. 390, 395 (1981). Thus, “the Federal 26 Rules of Evidence do not strictly apply to preliminary injunction proceedings.” Disney 27 Entertainment, Inc. v. VidAngel, Inc., 224 F. Supp. 3d 957, 966 (C.D. Cal. 2016), aff’d.
28 869 F.3d 848 (9th Cir. 2017). Moreover, evidentiary issues at this stage properly go to weight rather than admissibility, see id. at 966, and the Court can easily assess the weight of the evidence without the parties’ arguments.

1 Individual owner-operators use a business model common in both California and 2 across the country. They typically buy or lease their own trucks, a significant personal 3 investment considering that the record reflects a single truck can cost in excess of 4 $100,000. See, e.g., Doc. 54-2 at 5. Then, the owner-operators typically work for 5 themselves for some time to build up their experience and reputation in the industry. Once 6 the owner-operator is ready to expand their business, they contract for or bid on jobs that 7 require more than one truck, at which time, the owner-operator will subcontract with one 8 or more other owner-operators to complete the job. Many individual owner-operators have 9 invested in specialized equipment and have obtained the skills to operate that equipment 10 efficiently.

11 Whether certain laws and regulations in the California Labor Code apply to truck 12 drivers, generally, depends on their status as employees or independent contractors. S.G.
13 Borello & Sons, Inc. v. Dep't of Indus. Relations, 48 Cal. 3d 341, 350 (1989). For nearly 14 three decades, California courts have used a test, based on the Borello decision, to 15 determine whether workers are correctly classified as employees or independent 16 contractors. See id. at 341. The Borello standard considers the “right to control work,” as 17 well as many other factors, including (a) whether the worker is engaged in a distinct 18 occupation or business, (b) the amount of supervision required, (c) the skill required, (d) 19 whether the worker supplies the tools required, (e) the length of time for which services 20 are to be performed, (f) the method of payment, (g) whether the work is part of the regular 21 business of the principal, and (h) whether the parties believe they are creating an employer-22 employee relationship. Id. at 355. In April of 2018, the California Supreme Court replaced 23 the Borello classification test for Wage Order No. 9 with the “ABC test.” Dynamex 24 Operations West v. Superior Court, 4 Cal. 5th 903 (2018).

25 California’s Assembly-Bill 5 (“AB-5”) codified the ABC test adopted in Dynamex
26 and expanded its reach to contexts beyond Wage Order No. 9, including workers’ 27 compensation, unemployment insurance, and disability insurance. As applied to the motor 28 carrier context, AB-5 provides a mandatory test for determining whether a person driving

1 or hauling freight for another contracting person or entity is an independent contractor or 2 an employee for all purposes under the California Labor Code, the Industrial Welfare
3 Commission wage orders, and the Unemployment Insurance Code. See Cal. Labor Code
4 § 2750.3(a)(1). Under AB-5’s ABC test, an owner-operator is presumed to be an employee 5 unless the motor carrier establishes each of three requirements:

6 (A) The person is free from the control and direction of the hiring entity in 7 connection with the performance of the work, both under the contract for 8 the performance of the work and in fact.

9 (B) The person performs work that is outside the usual course of the hiring 10 entity’s business.

11 (C) The person is customarily engaged in an independently established trade, 12 occupation, or business of the same nature as that involved in the work performed.

13 AB-5 also includes certain exceptions that were not part of the Dynamex test, including an 14 exception for “business-to-business contracting relationship[s].”<sup>2</sup> Id. at § 2750.3(a)(1)(e).
15 The statute additionally provides that “[i]f a court of law rules that the three-part [ABC] 16 test . . . cannot be applied to a particular context” due, for example, to federal preemption, 17 “then the determination of employee or independent contractor status in that context shall 18 instead be governed by [Borello].” Id. at § 2750.3(a)(1)(3).

19 On September 18, 2019, California Governor Gavin Newsom signed AB-5 into law.
20 AB-5 went into effect on January 1, 2020. On December 2, 2019, Plaintiffs filed their 21 motion for a preliminary injunction with a hearing set for December 30, 2019. When the 22 Court continued the hearing to January 13, 2020, Plaintiffs filed a motion for a temporary 23 restraining order on December 24, 2019. After considering the parties’ arguments in their 24

26 <sup>2</sup> The statute identifies numerous exempted occupations to which Borello, rather than 27 the ABC test, will continue to apply. The exempted occupations include doctors, lawyers, 28 accountants, investment advisers, commercial fishermen, and others. See Cal. Labor Code § 2750.3(b)(1)-(6). Motor carriers are not exempted.

1 briefing, the Court granted the temporary restraining order and enjoined Defendants from 2 enforcing AB-5 as to any motor carrier operating in California until this Court’s resolution
3 of Plaintiffs’ motion for a preliminary injunction. On January 13, 2020, the Court heard 4 argument on Plaintiffs’ motion for a preliminary injunction. At the hearing, the Court 5 extended the temporary restraining order until the date of the Court’s decision on Plaintiffs’ 6 motion. For the following reasons, the Court finds a preliminary injunction is warranted.

7 II. DISCUSSION

8 In support of their motion for preliminary injunction, Plaintiffs argue they are highly 9 likely to show AB-5 is preempted by the FAAAA and by the Dormant Commerce Clause.
10 According to Plaintiffs, unless the Court enjoins Defendants from enforcing AB-5, its 11 members will suffer irreparable injury, including constitutional injuries, as well as 12 enforcement actions imposing civil and criminal penalties. The State Defendants oppose, 13 contending that Plaintiffs are unlikely to succeed on the merits of their claims, that 14 Plaintiffs’ delay in seeking injunctive relief undermines their claim of irreparable injury, 15 and that the public interest weighs in the State Defendants’ favor. Intervenor-Defendant 16 International Brotherhood of Teamsters opposes on the same grounds as the State 17 Defendants but with the additional contention that Plaintiffs CTA and Odom lack 18 standing.<sup>3</sup> Accordingly, as a threshold matter, the Court first addresses Plaintiffs’ standing 19 and then the four elements required for a preliminary injunction.

20 A. Article III Standing

21 “One of the essential elements of a legal case or controversy is that the plaintiff have 22 standing to sue.” Trump v. Hawaii, 138 S.Ct. 2392, 2416 (2018). To demonstrate Article 23 III standing, a plaintiff must show a “concrete and particularized” injury that is “fairly 24 traceable” to the defendant’s conduct and “that is likely to be redressed by a favorable 25 decision.” Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, 136 S.Ct. 1540, 1547-48 (2016). “At least one plaintiff 26

27 <sup>3</sup> Throughout this Order, the Court refers to the State Defendants and Intervenor-28 Defendant collectively as “Defendants.”

1 must have standing to seek each form of relief requested, and that party bears the burden 2 of establishing the elements of standing with the manner and degree of evidence required 3 at the successive stages of the litigation.” City & Cty. of San Francisco v. U.S. Dept. of 4 Homeland Security, 944 F.3d 773, 786-87 (9th Cir. 2019) (internal quotation marks and 5 citations omitted). “At this very preliminary stage, plaintiffs may rely on the allegations 6 in their Complaint and whatever other evidence they submitted in support of their 7 preliminary-injunction motion to meet their burden.” Id. at 787.

8 Intervenor attacks Plaintiffs’ standing on three grounds, none of which have merit.
9 First, Intervenor argues that Plaintiffs lack standing because they do not establish the ABC 10 test will be used against them, and thus, they do not establish the requisite actual or 11 imminent injury. For the same reasons discussed in the Court’s Order granting Plaintiffs’ 12 temporary restraining order, the Court disagrees. Plaintiffs have satisfied the imminent 13 injury requirement where, assuming their interpretation of AB-5 is correct, they face the 14 choice of either implementing significant, costly compliance measures or risking criminal 15 and civil prosecution. See, e.g., Cal. Unemp. Ins. Code § 2117; Cal. Labor Code § 1199.5; 16 Cal. Labor Code §§ 226.6 and 226.8. Indeed, as recently as December 23, 2019, 17 Defendants expressly declined to withhold enforcement of AB-5, even for a short time.
18 That is sufficient for standing in a pre-enforcement challenge. See, e.g., Susan B. Anthony 19 List v. Driehaus, 573 U.S. 149, 168 (2014) (finding petitioners in pre-enforcement 20 challenge demonstrated an injury-in-fact sufficient for Article III standing); see also id. at 21 158 (“When an individual is subject to [the threatened enforcement of a law], an actual 22 arrest, prosecution, or other enforcement action is not a prerequisite to challenging the 23 law.”).

24 Next, Intervenor contends that to show a concrete injury, CTA must definitively 25 show that some of its members’ drivers would be classified as independent contractors 26 under the pre-AB-5 Borello classification test. The Court is not persuaded that such proof 27 is required at this very preliminary stage. In other words, Plaintiffs need not show with 28 complete certainty that a CTA member would be harmed by the ABC test but not by the 1 Borello test; rather, plaintiffs “need only establish a risk or threat of injury to satisfy the 2 actual injury requirement.” City & Cty. of San Francisco, 944 F.3d at 787 (quoting Harris 3 v. Bd. of Supervisors, 366 F.3d 754, 762 (9th Cir. 2004) (emphasis in original)). CTA has 4 done so here by claiming that many of its members contract with independent-contractor 5 drivers, who can no longer be classified as independent contractors under the ABC test.

6       Regardless, even if CTA were held to the higher standard proposed by Intervenor, 7 CTA would satisfy it. In response to Intervenor’s challenge, CTA offers evidence showing 8 that some of its members’ drivers have been classified as independent contractors under 9 Borello or tests like Borello.<sup>4</sup> Furthermore, Intervenor’s apparent position—that CTA 10 members’ drivers will always be classified as employees under Borello and thus, the new 11 ABC test’s classification of them as employees cannot harm them—is undermined by the 12 Ninth Circuit’s own observations about the two tests. See, e.g., California Trucking Ass’n
13 v. Su, 903 F.3d 953, 964 (9th Cir. 2018) (distinguishing Borello test as “contrary” to ABC 14 tests adopted in other states because under Borello, “[w]hether the work fits within the 15 usual course of an employer’s business is one factor among many—and not even the most 16 important one”) (“[T]he Borello standard does not compel the use of employees or 17 independent contractors.”). Accordingly, the Court finds that, at this very preliminary 18 stage, Plaintiffs have carried their burden to show some of its members face the risk of 19 having their drivers, who would be classified as independent contractors under Borello, 20 instead be misclassified as employees under the ABC test.

22
23       <sup>4</sup> Plaintiffs’ request for judicial notice of Exhibits A-C [Doc. 73-3] is GRANTED.
24 “[A] court may take judicial notice of its own records in other cases, as well as the records 25 of an inferior court in other cases.” United States v. Wilson, 631 F.2d 118, 119 (9th Cir.
26 1980). The Court is not persuaded by Intervenor’s arguments opposing judicial notice, 27 particularly where Plaintiffs offered their evidence in response to Intervenor’s attack on 28 their standing. Nonetheless, Intervenor’s request for judicial notice, [Doc. 78], is GRANTED for the same reasons as Plaintiffs’ request, but Intervenor’s cases do not compel a different conclusion as to Plaintiffs’ standing.

1 Finally, Intervenor argues that CTA lacks “associational standing” because it has not 2 identified any single CTA member who will be injured by use of the ABC test to determine 3 whether drivers are employees. In support, Intervenor cites Summers v. Earth Island Inst., 4 which held that an association has standing to represent its members’ interests when “at 5 least one identified member had suffered or would suffer harm.” 555 U.S. 488, 498 (2009).
6 Intervenor further reasons that, if Defendants were enjoined from enforcing the ABC test, 7 employment status would be decided based on the prior Borello test. Thus, again, 8 Intervenor contends that because CTA does not submit evidence that any of its members’ 9 drivers are not employees under Borello, there is no evidence that the ABC test injures a 10 single CTA member.

11 The Court disagrees. “[A]n association has standing to bring suit on behalf of its 12 members when: (a) its members would otherwise have standing to sue in their own right; 13 (b) the interests it seeks to protect are germane to the organization’s purpose; and (c) neither 14 the claim asserted nor the relief requested requires the participation of individual members 15 in the lawsuit.” Hunt v. Washington State Apple Advertising Com’n, 432 U.S. 333, 343
16 (1977). Associational standing is present here where CTA claims that many of its members 17 use independent-contractor drivers to provide interstate trucking services to customers in 18 California and other states, and that, as a result, those members have a concrete interest in 19 knowing whether they must fundamentally change their longstanding business structure by 20 shifting to using only employee drivers when operating within California.

21 Moreover, Summers is distinguishable from CTA’s case. Summers involved a 22 dispute about a timber project that had settled, and “no other project [was] before the court 23 in which respondents were [even] threatened with injury in fact.” Summers, 555 U.S. at 24 491-92. Unlike Summers, the dispute here facing CTA’s members is still very much alive 25 because without preliminary injunctive relief, AB-5 will apply to them and likely be 26 enforced against CTA’s members to the full extent of the law. The Ninth Circuit, too, has 27 expressed doubt that “Summers, an environmental case brought under the National 28 Environmental Policy Act, stands for the proposition that an injured member of an

1 organization must always be specifically identified in order to establish Article III standing 2 for the organization.” Nat’l Council of La Raza v. Cegavske, 800 F.3d 1032, 1041 (9th Cir.
3 2015). The Ninth Circuit explained:

4 where it is relatively clear, rather than merely speculative, that one or more 5 members have been or will be adversely affected by a defendant’s action, and 6 where the defendant need not know the identity of a particular member to 7 understand and respond to an organization’s claim of injury, we see no 8 purpose to be served by requiring an organization to identify by name the 9 member or members injured.

10 Id. Such is the case here. Intervenor offers no reason why it cannot address the 11 predominately legal claims brought by CTA without the identification of a particular CTA 12 member. Thus, for the previous reasons, the Court is satisfied that Plaintiffs have standing 13 at this very preliminary stage.<sup>5</sup>

14 B. Preliminary Injunction

15 “Generally, the purpose of a preliminary injunction is to preserve the status quo and 16 the rights of the parties until a final judgment issues in the cause.” City & Cty. of San 17 Francisco, 944 F.3d at 789. Plaintiffs can obtain a preliminary injunction where they 18 establish four factors: “(1) that [they are] likely to succeed on the merits, (2) that [they are] 19 likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, (3) that the balance of 20 equities tips in [their] favor, and (4) that an injunction is in the public interest.” Id. at 788-21 89 (quoting Winter v. NRDC, 555 U.S. 7, 22 (2008)). In the alternative, however, “serious 22 questions going to the merits’ and a balance of hardship that tips sharply towards the 23 plaintiff[s] can support issuance of a preliminary injunction, so long as the plaintiff[s] also

26 <sup>5</sup> At the January 13, 2020 oral argument, Plaintiffs’ counsel clarified that they seek 27 relief only as to their motor carrier members. Thus, the Court need not consider 28 Intervenor’s challenge to owner-operator Odom’s standing. Odom’s standing bears no relevance on whether the Court can enjoin enforcement of AB-5’s ABC test as to motor carriers because Odom is not a motor carrier.

1 show[] that there is a likelihood of irreparable injury and that the injunction is in the public
2 interest.” Id. at 789 (quoting All. for the Wild Rockies v. Cottrell, 632 F.3d 1127, 1135 (9th 3 Cir. 2011)).

4 1. Likelihood of Success on the Merits

5 To prevail on their motion for a preliminary injunction, Plaintiffs must establish, at 6 a minimum, that there are “serious questions” on the merits of at least one of their 7 challenges to AB-5’s ABC test. See Cottrell, 632 F.3d at 1135. For the following reasons, 8 Plaintiffs have done so with their FAAAA preemption challenge.<sup>6</sup>

9 Within the FAAAA, Congress included an express preemption provision, which 10 provides that states “may not enact or enforce a law, regulation, or other provision having 11 the force and effect of law related to a price, route, or service of any motor carrier . . . with 12 respect to the transportation of property.” 49 U.S.C. § 14501(c)(1). The preemption 13 provision is a broad one. “The phrase ‘related to’ embraces state laws ‘having a connection 14 with or reference to’ carrier ‘rates, routes, or services,’ whether directly or indirectly.” Cal.
15 Trucking Ass’n v. Su, 903 F.3d 953, 960 (9th Cir. 2018). As the Ninth Circuit has 16 explained, “[t]here can be no doubt that when Congress adopted the FAAA Act, it intended 17 to broadly preempt state laws that were ‘related to a price, route or service’ of a motor 18 carrier.” Am. Trucking Ass’ns, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles, 559 F.3d 1046, 1053 (9th Cir.
19 2009) (emphasis added).

20 Similarly, the First Circuit has explained that Congress had “dual objectives” for 21 adopting a “broad reach” by copying the language of the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978 22 into the FAAAA’s preemption clause: (1) “to ensure that the States would not undo federal 23 deregulation with regulation of their own” and (2) “to avoid a patchwork of state service-24 determining laws, rules, and regulations.” Schwann v. FedEx Ground Pkg. System, Inc.,

26
27 <sup>6</sup> For purposes of preliminary injunctive relief, Plaintiffs have satisfied this prong 28 based on the FAAAA preemption ground. Thus, the Court declines at this time to analyze Plaintiffs’ alternative Dormant Commerce Clause challenge to AB-5.

1 813 F.3d 429, 436 (1st Cir. 2016) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). To be 2 sure, the breadth of the FAAAA’s preemption clause “does not mean the sky is the limit”:
3 “Congress did not intend to preempt laws that implement California’s traditional labor 4 protection powers, and which affect carriers’ rates, routes, or services in only tenuous
5 ways.” Su, 903 F.3d at 960-61 (emphasis added) (citing Dilts v. Penske Logistics, LLC, 6 769 F.3d 637, 647-50 (9th Cir. 2014) (meal and rest break laws) and Californians for Safe
7 & Competitive Dump Truck Transp. v. Mendonca, 152 F.3d 1184, 1189 (9th Cir. 1998)
8 (prevailing wage law)); see also id. at 960 (“[T]he FAAAA does not preempt state laws 9 that affect a carrier’s prices, routes, or services in only a tenuous, remote or peripheral 10 manner with no significant impact on Congress’s deregulatory objectives.”) (internal 11 quotation marks omitted). Still, where a state law “significantly impacts a carrier’s prices, 12 routes, or services,” it is “forbidden.” Id.

13         Whether the FAAAA preempts AB-5 and its ABC test is a matter of first impression 14 in this circuit, but Ninth Circuit jurisprudence touching on the issue strongly suggests 15 preemption. For example, in American Trucking Associations, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles, 16 the Ninth Circuit reversed the district court’s denial of American Trucking Association’s 17 (“ATA”) motion for a preliminary injunction and even took the unusual step of remanding 18 with instructions to the district court to issue a preliminary injunction. 559 F.3d 1046, 19 1060-61 (9th Cir. 2009). ATA contended that the FAAAA preempted various provisions 20 in the Port’s mandatory concession agreements for drayage trucking services at ports. As 21 to the provision requiring motor carriers to use employee drivers rather than independent-22 contractor drivers, the Ninth Circuit concluded it could “hardly be doubted” that the 23 FAAAA preempted the provision and that, unless the Port could demonstrate an exception 24 to the FAAAA’s preemption provision applied, the motor carriers would likely prevail on 25
26
27
28

1 their challenge.<sup>7</sup> Id. at 1053. The Ninth Circuit went on to conclude that the concession 2 agreement’s provision requiring the “phasing out” of thousands of independent contractors 3 “is one likely to be shown to be preempted.” Id. at 1056.

4 California Trucking Association v. Su offers additional guidance. 903 F.3d 953 (9th 5 Cir. 2018). There, the Ninth Circuit considered whether the FAAAA preempted the 6 Borello multi-factor test for distinguishing between employees and independent 7 contractors. In so doing, the Ninth Circuit noted the “obvious proposition” for which 8 American Trucking stood: “that an ‘all or nothing’ rule requiring services be performed by 9 certain types of employee drivers . . . was likely preempted [by the FAAAA].” Id. at 964.
10 The court then distinguished the Borello test as “wholly different from [the provision at 11 issue in] American Trucking” because neither the Borello standard or “the nature of the 12 Borello standard compell[ed] the use of employees to provide certain carriage services.”
13 Id. The Ninth Circuit distinguished the Borello test from the ABC test adopted in other 14 states, noting “the application of which courts have then held to be preempted.” Id. It did 15 so by explaining that, “[l]ike American Trucking, the ‘ABC’ test may effectively compel a 16 motor carrier to use employees for certain services because, under the ‘ABC’ test, a worker
17 providing a service within an employer’s usual course of business will never be considered 18 an independent contractor.” Id. (emphasis added). The court further explained that, under 19 Borello and in contrast to the ABC test, “whether the work fits within the usual course of 20 an employer’s business is one factor among many—and not even the most important one.”
21 Id. (emphasis added).

22 Although not binding on this Court, the First Circuit’s recent analysis of an ABC 23 test identical to California’s is persuasive. In Schwann v. FedEx Ground Package System,

26
27 <sup>7</sup> Here, Defendants do not argue a similar exception to the FAAAA’s preemption 28 provision applies to the ABC test; instead, they contend the ABC test does not fall within the broad scope of the FAAAA’s preemption provision.

1 Inc., the First Circuit held the FAAAA preempted Massachusetts’ ABC test’s Prong B as 2 applied to FedEx.<sup>8</sup> 813 F.3d 429 (1st Cir. 2016). In so holding, the First Circuit reasoned:

3 The regulatory interference posed by Plaintiffs’ application of Prong 2 is not 4 peripheral. The decision whether to provide a service directly, with one’s own 5 employee, or to procure the services of an independent contractor is a 6 significant decision in designing and running a business. . . . Such an 7 application of state law poses a serious potential impediment to the 8 achievement of the FAAAA’s objectives because a court, rather than the 9 market participant, would ultimately determine what services that company 10 provides and how it chooses to provide them.

11 Id. at 438.

12 Together, these cases show that the FAAAA likely preempts “an all or nothing” state 13 law like AB-5 that categorically prevents motor carriers from exercising their freedom to 14 choose between using independent contractors or employees. See also Bedoya v. Am.
15 Eagle Express Inc., 914 F.3d 812, 824 (3d Cir. 2019) (holding New Jersey’s ABC test is 16 not preempted by the FAAAA because contrary to Massachusetts’ test, it includes an 17 “alternative method for reaching independent contractor status—that is, by demonstrating 18 that the worker provides services outside of the putative employer’s ‘places of business,’” 19 and “[n]o part of the New Jersey test categorically prevents carriers from using independent 20 contractors.”). Yet, that is precisely the case here. Because contrary to Prong B, 21 independent-contractor drivers necessarily perform work within “the usual course of the

---

22 <sup>8</sup> In both statutes, Prong B is the Achilles heel. California’s Prong B is identical to 23 the preempted Massachusetts test because neither test permits an alternative method for 24 using an independent-contractor driver. Cf. Bedoya v. Am. Eagle Express Inc., 914 F.3d 25 812, 824 (3d Cir. 2019) (finding New Jersey’s ABC test not preempted by FAAAA because 26 New Jersey test provided an alternative method by which a motor carrier could still use 27 independent contractors via the additional clause: “or [performs such service] outside of 28 all the places of business of [the employer]”) (emphasis added) (distinguishing between Massachusetts’ ABC test by explaining “[t]he Massachusetts statute does not include New Jersey’s alternative method for reaching independent contractor status—that is, by demonstrating that the worker provides services outside of the putative employer’s ‘places of business’”).

1 [motor carrier] hiring entity’s business,” drivers who may own and operate their own rigs
2 will never be considered independent contractors under California law.<sup>9</sup> Thus, it follows 3 that Prong B of the ABC test requires motor carriers to artificially reclassify all 4 independent-contractor drivers as employee-drivers for all purposes under the California
5 Labor Code, the Industrial Welfare Commission wage orders, and the Unemployment 6 Insurance Code. See Cal. Labor Code § 2750.3(a)(1). Indeed, the Ninth Circuit has already 7 acknowledged the likelihood of such a test being preempted by the FAAAA. See Su, 903 8 F.3d at 964 (“Like American Trucking, the ‘ABC’ test may effectively compel a motor 9 carrier to use employees for certain services because, under the ‘ABC’ test, a worker
10 providing a service within an employer’s usual course of business will never be considered 11 an independent contractor.”) (emphasis added).

12 Notably, the first and only court thus far to consider an FAAAA preemption 13 challenge to AB-5 agreed. On January 8, 2020, the Los Angeles Superior Court ruled that 14 because the ABC test effectively prohibits motor carriers from using independent 15 contractors to provide transportation services, the test has a significant, impermissible 16 effect on motor carriers’ “prices, routes, and services,” and thus, is preempted by the 17 FAAAA. The People of the State of California v. Cal Cartage Transportation Express, 18 LLC, Case No. BC689320 (Los Angeles Superior Court January 8, 2020). Moreover, other 19 district courts considering FAAAA preemption challenges to California’s ABC test, albeit 20

21
22 <sup>9</sup> During the January 13, 2020 hearing, the Court repeatedly invited Defendants to 23 explain how the ABC test was not an “all or nothing” test. Specifically, the Court invited 24 them to explain how a motor carrier could contract with an independent owner-operator as 25 an independent contractor, rather than as an employee, under the ABC test. Neither the 26 State nor Intervenor could provide an example. Instead, Defendants repeatedly asserted 27 that a broker company that did not perform trucking work could plausibly contract with an 28 independent owner-operator. Brokers, however, are not motor carriers. Accordingly, the Court observes that the ABC test appears to be rigged in such a way that a motor carrier cannot contract with independent contractor owner-operators without classifying them as employees.

1 under the pre-AB-5 Dynamex standard, have applied similar logic and found the FAAAA
2 preempts Prong B. See, e.g., B&O Logistics, Inc. v. Cho, 2019 WL 2879876, at *2-4 (C.D.
3 Cal. April 15, 2019) (holding “Su, American Trucking, and Schwann collectively establish 4 that the FAAAA preempts a state law that categorically requires a motor carrier to hire
5 employees—and not independent contractors—as drivers. Here, the B prong of Dynamex’s 6 ABC test would require Plaintiff to reclassify Defendant as an employee for the purposes 7 of California’s wage orders (which regulate, inter alia, minimum wages, maximum hours, 8 and meal and rest breaks) because Defendant performs work that is in the usual course of 9 Plaintiff’s business (i.e., transporting property),” and thus, “Plaintiff may seek a declaration 10 that the B prong is preempted by the FAAAA”); Valadez v. CSX Intermodal Terminals, 11 Inc., 2019 WL 1975460, at *7-8 (N.D. Cal. March 15, 2019) (finding the FAAAA preempts 12 Prong B of the ABC test in Dynamex in part because Prong B “effectively prevents motor 13 carriers from using independent contractors to perform services within their usual course 14 of business,” and “Su strongly indicates that a state law that would prevent a motor carrier, 15 like Defendant, from hiring independent contractors, rather than employees, to perform its 16 services would be preempted by the FAAAA”); Alvarez v. XPO Logistics Cartage LLC, 17 2018 WL 6271965, at *4-5 (C.D. Cal. Nov. 15, 2018) (relying in part on Su and finding 18 “the ABC test [as adopted in Dynamex] ‘relates’ to a motor carrier’s services in more than 19 a ‘tenuous’ manner and is therefore preempted by the FAAAA”); contra. Henry v. Central 20 Freight Lines, Inc., 2019 WL 2465330, at *5 (E.D. Cal. June 13, 2019) (holding the 21 FAAAA does not preempt the Dynamex ABC test because “[t]he Dynamex ABC test is a 22 general classification test that does not apply to motor carriers specifically and does not, 23 by its terms, compel a carrier to use an employee or an independent contractor.”); Western 24 States Trucking Ass’n v. Schoorl, 377 F. Supp. 3d 1056, 1070-71 (E.D. Cal. 2019) (relying 25 on Dilts to hold the FAAAA does not preempt Dynamex’s ABC test); Phillips v.
26 Roadrunner Intermodal Svcs., 2016 WL 9185401, at *4-7 (C.D. Cal. Aug. 16, 2016) 27 (same).

1 Defendants offer a variety of arguments against FAAAAA preemption, but none are 2 persuasive. For example, Defendants argue that Su and American Trucking have no 3 bearing on the ABC test. In so doing, however, Defendants attempt to characterize the 4 ABC test as “not requir[ing] that motor carriers—or anyone at all—transition from 5 independent contractors to employees,” but “[i]nstead, [as] merely provid[ing] the 6 applicable test to assess whether a worker is an independent contractor or an employee.”
7 Doc. 55 at 18. Defendants’ curious argument is that “the ABC test itself imposes no legal 8 obligations” because it only sets forth the test for determining whether California’s labor 9 laws apply to a worker. Doc. 58 at 19. Although it is technically true that nothing in the 10 ABC test prohibits motor carriers from contracting with independent contractors, that 11 argument merely poses a distinction without a difference. Put another way, it is true that 12 the statute does not expressly state that motor carriers cannot contract with independent 13 contractors, but Prong B permits motor carriers to contract with independent contractors
14 only if they classify and treat those independent contractors as employees under California 15 law.

16 The Court is similarly unpersuaded by Defendants’ contention that this Court lacks 17 the ability to consider whether AB-5 is preempted because, according to Defendants, the 18 ABC test is merely a “test for employment.” Doc. 58 at 19. According to Defendants, 19 “[t]he question for purposes of Plaintiffs’ FAAAAA preemption claim is . . . whether 20 California’s employment laws that attach through the ABC test are preempted,” rather than 21 the ABC test, itself. Doc. 58 at 19 (emphasis added). To support their theory, Defendants 22 rely upon the unpublished district court opinion from which the parties appealed in Su.
23 That opinion, however, is both not binding and lacks persuasive value, particularly in light 24 of the Ninth Circuit’s decision. See Su, 903 F.3d at 955 (distinguishing Borello standard 25 from Massachusetts ABC test by explaining “the ABC test may effectively compel a motor 26 carrier to use employees for certain services because, under the ABC test, a worker
27 providing a service within an employer’s usual course of business will never be considered 28 an independent contractor”). Contrary to Defendants’ position, the Court finds that “the

1 question is not whether the FAAAA preempts California’s wage orders [and other 2 employment laws]; rather, it is whether [AB-5’s] ABC test—used to interpret the wage 3 orders [and other employment laws]—is preempted.” Alvarez v. XPO Logistics Cartage 4 LLC, 2018 WL 6271965, at *5 (C.D. Cal. Nov. 15, 2018).

5 Next, Defendants argue that the FAAAA’s preemption provision does not apply to 6 the ABC test because, according to Defendants, that test is a “law of general applicability.” 7 First, to the extent Defendants posit that a law of general applicability cannot be preempted, 8 they are incorrect. See Su, 903 F.3d at 966 (“This is not to say that the general applicability 9 of a law is, in and of itself, sufficient to show it is not preempted.”) (citing Morales v. Trans 10 World Airlines, Inc., 504 U.S. 374, 386 (1992)). For the same reason, the Court rejects 11 Defendants’ reliance on People ex rel. Harris v. Pac Anchor Transp., Inc., 59 Cal. 4th 772
12 (2014). Contrary to Defendants’ reading, Pac Anchor does not foreclose FAAAA 13 preemption of the ABC test. As the Los Angeles Superior Court reasoned, “the better 14 reading of Pac Anchor is not that laws of general applicability are always immune from 15 FAAAA preemption. Rather, Pac Anchor left open the possibility that state laws 16 prohibiting motor carriers from using independent owner-operator truck drivers might be 17 preempted—and even suggested that they would.” Cal Cartrage, Case No. BC689320, at 18 11. Still, “[w]hile general applicability is not dispositive, . . . it is a relevant consideration 19 because it will likely influence whether the effect on prices, routes, and services is tenuous 20 or significant.” Su, 903 F.3d at 966. The Ninth Circuit further explained that “[w]hat 21 matters is not solely that the law is generally applicable, but where in the chain of a motor 22 carrier’s business it is acting to compel a certain result (e.g., a consumer or workforce) and 23 what result it is compelling (e.g., a certain wage, non-discrimination, a specific system of 24 delivery, a specific person to perform the delivery).” Id. Here, the Court is not persuaded 25 that the ABC test is a law of general applicability, but even if it were, Plaintiffs have shown 26 the ABC test is still likely preempted by the FAAAA because it compels a certain result—27 by “compel[ling] a motor carrier to use employees for certain services.” Id. at 964.

28

1 Defendants argue that Dilts v. Penske Logistics, LLC, 769 F.3d 637, 649 (9th Cir.
2 2014) and Californians for Safe & Competitive Dump Truck Transp. v. Mendonca, 152 3 F.3d 1184, 1189 (9th Cir. 1998) require the opposite conclusion. The preemption issues in 4 those cases, however, are significantly different from the preemption issue raised here.
5 Dilts and Mendonca concerned workers that had already been properly classified as 6 “employees.” In Dilts, the Ninth Circuit held that specific California Labor Code
7 protections for employees—meal and rest break laws—were not preempted by the FAAAA 8 because they were “normal background rules for almost all employers doing business in 9 the state of California” and did not, either directly or indirectly “set prices, mandate or 10 prohibit certain routes, or tell motor carriers what services they may or may not provide, 11 either directly or indirectly.” Dilts, 769 F.3d at 647 (emphasis in original); see also 12 Mendonca, 152 F.3d at 1187-89 (holding FAAAA did not preempt California’s prevailing 13 wage law as applied to employees); Ridgeway et al. v. Walmart, Inc., Case No. 17-15983 14 (9th Cir. Jan. 6, 2020) (holding FAAAA did not preempt California’s wage law requiring 15 trucking company to pay minimum wages for driver rest time during which the company 16 retains control over the driver because the law did not set prices, mandate or prohibit certain 17 routes, or tell motor carriers what services they may provide).

18 In contrast, the present case concerns the test used to classify workers for the purpose 19 of determining whether all of California employment laws do or do not apply, rather than 20 a small group of those laws, such as the meal break regulations in Dilts. Thus, the 21 combined effect of all such laws has a significant impact on motor carriers’ prices, routes, 22 or services. Accordingly, Dilts and other similar cases are distinguishable because they 23 focus on whether discrete wage-and-hour laws and regulations had more than a tenuous 24 impact on motor carriers’ prices, routes, or services, not whether the combined impact of 25 applying all of California’s employment laws to independent owner-operators had more 26 than a tenuous impact on motor carriers’ prices, routes, or services. Moreover, while Dilts 27 reasoned that “applying California’s meal and rest break laws to motor carriers would not 28 contribute to an impermissible ‘patchwork’ of state-specific laws, defeating Congress’s

1 deregulatory objectives,” the ABC test certainly would. Dilts, 769 F.3d at 647 (emphasis 2 added). By effectively prohibiting motor carriers from contracting with independent-3 contractor drivers, AB-5 and its ABC test would transform California into its own patch in 4 the very “patchwork” of state-specific laws Congress intended to prevent.<sup>10</sup>

5 Finally, the Court is not persuaded by Intervenor’s brief, conclusory argument that 6 “Plaintiffs fail to establish that motor carriers cannot avail themselves of AB-5’s business-7 to-business exception.” Doc. 58 at 25. To the extent Intervenor contends a motor carrier
8 could contract with an independent contractor under AB-5’s business-to-business 9 exception, Intervenor has not shown how that is possible. Further, like the Los Angeles 10 Superior Court, this Court is skeptical that motor carriers could, in fact, avail themselves 11 of that exception, particularly where the State Defendants, who are tasked with enforcing 12 AB-5, do not expressly concede that the exception would apply.<sup>11</sup> Accordingly, the Court
13 adopts the thorough reasoning of the Los Angeles Superior Court’s January 8, 2020 order 14 rejecting that argument. See Cal Carriage, Case No. BC689320, at 12-14 (rejecting 15 plaintiff’s argument that the “business-to-business” exception saves AB-5 from FAAAA 16 preemption as applied to motor carriers).

17 The Court finds AB-5’s ABC test has more than a “tenuous, remote, or peripheral” 18 impact on motor carriers’ prices, routes, or services, particularly in light of our Ninth 19 Circuit jurisprudence casting serious doubt on the type of “all or nothing rule” that AB-5 20 implements. Thus, for the previous reasons, Plaintiffs have carried their burden at this 21 preliminary stage of showing a likelihood of success on the merits as to their FAAAA

24 <sup>10</sup> The Court is aware of only one state, Massachusetts, that has adopted an identical 25 ABC test to that adopted in California’s AB-5. Notably, the First Circuit struck down the 26 identical Massachusetts test as preempted by the FAAAA. See Schwann v. FedEx Ground 27 Package System, Inc., 813 F.3d 429 (1st Cir. 2016).

28 <sup>11</sup> In fact, until the January 13, 2020 hearing, the State Defendants were silent on the business-to-business exception. During the hearing, for the first time, the State Defendants expressed that the exception could potentially apply to motor carriers, but not that it definitively would.

1 preemption challenge. In the alternative, Plaintiffs have certainly raised “serious 2 questions” going to the merits.

3 2. Irreparable Harm

4 As to the second element, the Court finds Plaintiffs have carried their burden to show 5 the likelihood of irreparable harm. As this Court previously concluded at the temporary 6 restraining order stage, Plaintiffs have shown that irreparable harm is likely because 7 without significantly transforming their business operations to treat independent-contractor 8 drivers as employees for all specified purposes under California laws and regulations, they 9 face the risk of governmental enforcement actions, as well as criminal and civil penalties.
10 See, e.g., Cal. Unemp. Ins. Code § 2117; Cal. Labor Code § 1198.5; Cal. Labor Code §§
11 226.6 and 226.8.<sup>12</sup> Just as the Ninth Circuit noted in American Trucking, “motor carriers
12 are being put to a kind of Hobson’s choice, not entirely unlike that which faced the airlines
13 in Morales v. Trans World Airlines, Inc., 504 U.S. 374 (1992).” American Trucking, 559 14 F.3d at 1057 (9th Cir. 2009). In Morales, several states’ attorneys general set out to 15 regulate airline advertising and the compensation of passengers who gave up their seats on 16 overbooked flights. Morales, 504 U.S. at 379. Noting that the attorneys general “had made 17 clear that they would seek to enforce the challenged portions of the guidelines,” the 18 Supreme Court observed that injunctive relief is available where there exists a threat of 19 imminent proceedings of a criminal or civil nature against parties who are affected by an 20 unconstitutional act. Id. at 380-81. The Supreme Court further opined that the respondents 21 faced “a Hobson’s choice: continually violate the Texas law and expose themselves to 22 potentially huge liability; or violate the law once as a test case and suffer the injury of 23

24
25 <sup>12</sup> Defendants’ contention that any irreparable harm is undermined by Plaintiffs’ 26 delay in moving for preliminary injunctive relief does not require a different conclusion.
27 It is true that Plaintiffs could have moved for a preliminary injunction within weeks, rather 28 than months, of AB-5’s adoption in September 2019, but the Court is not persuaded that a two month delay in filing the motion wholly undermines their showing of irreparable harm.

1 obeying the law during the pendency of the proceedings and any further review.” Id. at 2 381.

3 Similarly, in remanding to the district court to issue a preliminary injunction, the 4 Ninth Circuit in American Trucking found the motor carriers faced a sort of Hobson’s 5 choice because “a very real penalty attaches to the motor carriers regardless of how they 6 proceed,” and “[t]hat is an imminent harm.” American Trucking, 559 F.3d at 1058. Here, 7 motor carriers wishing to continue offering the same services to their customers in 8 California must do so using only employee drivers, meaning they must significantly 9 restructure their business model, including by obtaining trucks, hiring and training 10 employee drivers, and establishing administrative infrastructure compliant with AB-5. The 11 only alternative available to motor carriers is to violate the law and face criminal and civil 12 penalties. The Court is satisfied that Plaintiffs have shown a likelihood of irreparable injury 13 without injunctive relief.

14 3. Balance of Equities; The Public Interest

15 If after the preliminary injunction stage, the Court finds that AB-5 is preempted by 16 the FAAAA, motor carriers will have suffered harm due to AB-5’s application to and 17 enforcement against them. See American Trucking, 559 F.3d at 1059 (finding the balance 18 of equities and public interest weighed in favor of motor carriers, explaining, “[W]e have 19 outlined the hardships that motor carriers will suffer if, as is likely, many provisions of the 20 Concession agreements are preempted and are, thus, being imposed in violation of the 21 Constitution”). On the other side of the scale, Defendants have legitimate concerns about 22 preventing the misclassification of workers as independent contractors. Nonetheless, with 23 or without the ABC test, California still maintains numerous laws and regulations designed 24 to protect workers classified as employees and to prevent misclassification, and the pre-25 AB-5 Borello standard will continue as the applicable classification test. See Cal. Labor 26 Code § 2750.3(a)(3) (mandating that should a court rule that the ABC test cannot be applied 27 to a particular context, the pre-AB-5 Borello test will apply). Thus, on balance, the 28 hardships faced by Plaintiffs significantly outweigh those faced by Defendants.

1 Similarly, the Court finds that the public interest supports preliminary injunctive 2 relief. The Court recognizes the Legislature’s public interest in protecting misclassified 3 workers, which it attempted to further address with AB-5. That public interest, however, 4 “must be balanced against the public interest represented in Congress’s decision to 5 deregulate the motor carrier industry, and the Constitution’s declaration that federal law is 6 to be supreme.” American Trucking, 559 F.3d at 1059-60. Therefore, the public interest 7 tips sharply in Plaintiffs’ favor.

8 III. CONCLUSION

9 FAAAA preemption is broad but not so broad that the sky is the limit: states retain 10 the ability to execute their police power with laws that do not significantly impact rates, 11 routes, or services. Here, however, there is little question that the State of California has 12 encroached on Congress’ territory by eliminating motor carriers’ choice to use independent 13 contractor drivers, a choice at the very heart of interstate trucking. In so doing, California 14 disregards Congress’ intent to deregulate interstate trucking, instead adopting a law that 15 produces the patchwork of state regulations Congress sought to prevent. With AB-5, 16 California runs off the road and into the preemption ditch of the FAAAA. Accordingly, 17 Plaintiffs’ motion for a preliminary injunction is GRANTED.

18 It is further ORDERED:

19 1. Defendant Xavier Becerra, in his official capacity as the Attorney General of 20 the State of California, Julia A. Su, in her official capacity as the Secretary of the California 21 Labor and Workforce Development Agency, Andre Schoorl, in his official capacity as the 22 Acting Director of the Department of Industrial Relations of the State of California, Lilia 23 Garcia Brower, in her official capacity as the Labor Commissioner of the State of 24 California, and Patrick Henning, in his official capacity as Director of the California 25 Employment Development Department are temporarily enjoined from enforcing Assembly 26 Bill 5’s ABC test, as set out in Cal. Labor Code § 2750.3(a)(1), as to any motor carrier 27 operating in California, pending the entry of final judgment in this action.

28 2. Because there is no realistic likelihood of harm to Defendants from granting

1 a preliminary injunction as to the enforcement of AB-5's ABC test, a security bond is not 2 required.

3 IT IS SO ORDERED.
