Law360 (September 30, 2026, 4:01 PM EDT) -- Crowell & Moring LLP announced on Wednesday the hiring of a former Littler Mendelson PC shareholder as a Denver-based partner in the firm's litigation and trial group and the head of its e-discovery and information management practice.

Lauren E. Schwartzreich joins Crowell & Moring after about 14 years at Littler, where she worked as a shareholder and e-discovery counsel.

"Lauren is a frontline e-discovery litigator and trusted strategic adviser whose combination of legal judgment, technical fluency, knowledge of e-discovery law, and leadership will be a tremendous asset to our clients and the firm," Andrew Kaplan, co-chair of Crowell & Moring's litigation and trial group, said in a statement on Wednesday. "Clients rely on her deep experience resolving e-discovery challenges in complex litigation and investigations, as well as her forward-thinking approach to information management, artificial intelligence, and other evolving technologies."

In her practice, Schwartzreich will assist clients with e-discovery in litigation and investigations while counseling on strategy and data use.

Schwartzreich earned her bachelor's and law degree from Emory University. She serves on the advisory board of the Georgetown Law Advanced eDiscovery Institute and was previously a member and former secretary of the New York City Bar Association's LGBTQ Rights Committee.

"Crowell handles some of the most complex, high-stakes litigation companies face today," Schwartzreich said in Wednesday's announcement. "I am excited to join this preeminent team at a time when data and information management are changing rapidly and can profoundly impact the course of litigation."

Crowell & Moring ranked as the 88th-largest U.S. law firm on this year's Law360 400 list, with nearly 240 partners among about 650 attorneys in the country. Crowell & Moring runs 13 offices, including locations in Belgium, Qatar and the United Kingdom.

Schwartzreich was not immediately available for comment on Wednesday.
